BY THE TIME REBECCA ROTTENBERG and Mattis Goldman began planning their wedding day, a few life-changing events were already underway. The couple, who met online at jdate.com, was moving from D.C. to L.A., where Mattis was starting a political consulting business. Perhaps that's why the pair chose Boston's posh Four Seasons Hotel for their wedding: Rebecca, a communications consultant for non-profits, grew up in nearby Newton and wanted a familiar venue she wouldn't have to worry about. "We knew we'd be in incredible hands," she says. Her hunch paid off: From the modern Jewish ceremony to the dumpling carts at dinner, every detail delighted the duo and their guests. And the celebration didn't end with the reception; a music-fueled after-party extended the fete. "Everyone says your wedding will go by quickly," notes Rebecca. "It does. But we enjoyed every minute of it." A.P.

1. Cakes to Remember made the couple's chocolate and vanilla cake, with leaves falling down each tier. 2. Rafanelli Events transformed the Four Seasons ballroom using rust and copper hues. "You walked in and felt transported," Rebecca recalls. 3. Rebecca bought her Platinum for Priscilla of Boston dress during a trip to New York with her mom, sister, and mother-in-law. 4. Just before the ceremony, the wedding party, bride, and groom took formal portraits on Boston Common. 5. Great food was crucial to the couple. "I hate weddings where there's not enough food and everyone is left starving. We had a sushi bar, dumpling carts, and a wine bar," Rebecca says. 6. Golden orchids and calla lilies adorned the tables. 7. Rebecca's bridesmaids wore black dresses of their choosing.
